The Department of Speech, Language, and Hearing Sciences (SLHS) at the University of Florida invites applications for a clinical faculty position (official UF title: Clinical Assistant Professor). This is a full-time (1.0 FTE) 12-month, non-tenure track, benefitted clinical faculty position. The position will involve classroom teaching of students in our Undergraduate Communication Sciences and Disorders program. Expected start date will be Fall 2018. Applicants must hold a PhD.

SLHS is housed within the College of Public Health and Health Professions and is well integrated within the Health Science Center, providing a wealth of opportunities for scholarly collaborations. We are a large department with more than 40 academic and clinical faculty members addressing a multi-faceted mission that encompasses education, clinical service, and research. Our degree programs for speech-language pathology (MA-CSD) and audiology (AuD) just obtained reaccreditation for another eight years. The Health Science Center is one of the largest in the nation, with six separate colleges.

The University of Florida (UF) is a comprehensive doctoral research-extensive university that includes a full range of academic departments and programs (www.ufl.edu). It has a long history of established programs in international education, research and service and is one of only 17 public, land-grant universities that belong to the Association of American Universities. UF is the state’s oldest and most comprehensive university and is among the nation’s most academically diverse public higher education institutions. It regularly has more than $700 million in research dollars.

The city of Gainesville is affordable and family friendly, offering a variety of opportunities for entertainment and outdoor activities.
